The party broke up at about six o'clock, wishing Marjorie many more birthdays.

A man apparently, from a farm in the vicinity of the city, was in town yesterday and had an experience which he undoubtedly will call hard luck. While in the city he had incidentally made a visit to some of the saloons and, to quench his thirst when at home, had purchased a gallon jug of fire water. With this jug in his hand he was walking up Main street in a rather shaky gait when he lost his grip on the jug. Crack went the jug and its contents gushed into the gutter. The crestfallen individual watched the stuff run down the gutter then picked up the pieces, drank what liquor there was left in the bottom of the jug and went on his way.
